

Subject: Proposal to add an informative note to U+3164 HANGUL FILLER

The 94 characters in the Hangul Compatibility Jamo block (U+3131–U+318E) are all directly from Row 4 (04-01 to 04-94; 0x2421–0x247E; EUC-KR 0xA4A1–0xA4FE) of KS X 1001 (formerly known as KS C 5601).

Special character

3164 HF HANGUL FILLER
 = chaeum
 ≈ 1160 HJ
F hangul jungseong filler

This Unicode character, U+3164 HANGUL FILLER, is one of the characters from Row 4 of KS X 1001 (at 04-52; 0x2454; EUC-KR 0xA4D4). In KS X 1001 (or under a KS X 1001-based encoding such as EUC-KR), this character was intended to represent hangul syllables that are outside of the 2350 in KS X 1001 proper.

For example, according to the KS X 1001 standard, the hangul syllable ㅇㅎ should be stored as [HF] ㅇ ㅎ under KS X 1001 (or under a KS X 1001-based encoding). If there is no final consonant (jongseong), another hangul filler is inserted in its place (ㅇ should be stored as [HF] ㅇ |[HF]).

(Of course, the jamo characters used in these sequences are the ones in KS X 1001 (Hangul Compatibility Jamo in Unicode), not Hangul Jamo (including Extended-A and Extended-B) primarily for representing archaic hangul syllables.)

Relevant information can also be found in Unicode FAQ about Korean (<http://www.unicode.org/faq/korean.html#8>).

Q: When mapping to KS X 1001-based MBCS character encodings, how should I map the 8,822 Unicode Hangul syllables not covered by KS X 1001?

A: KS X 1001:1998 covers only 2,350 pre-composed Hangul syllables. The same is true of the KS X 1001-based EUC-KR and ISO-2002-KR [sic] encodings. The rest of the Hangul syllables in Unicode (8,822 of them) have to be mapped to 8-byte sequences, as specified in Section 3.3 of the annotations to KS X 1001:1998 (KS C 5601-1992). This works as follows:

The first two octets (<0x24 0x54> in GL and <0xA4 0xD4> in GR) signify the beginning of a sequence; they are directly followed by 6 bytes which represent the initial consonant, the medial vowel, and the final consonant of a Hangul syllable, each using two bytes. By this mechanism, full round-trip conversion is possible between Unicode and KS X 1001-based encodings.

The representation using U+3164 HANGUL FILLER is meaningless in a modern Unicode-based environment, as Unicode provides all the 11172 precomposed syllables (at U+AC00–U+D7AF) for modern hangul, and conjoining hangul jamo (at U+1100–U+11FF, U+A960–U+A97F, and U+D7B0–U+D7FF) for archaic hangul.

Proposed change

Therefore, I propose to add the following informative note to U+3164:

- Originally intended to represent hangul syllables that are not included in KS X 1001. Its use is meaningless in a Unicode-based environment.

The code chart should look something like this:

Special character

3164 HF HANGUL FILLER
= chaeum

- Originally intended to represent hangul syllables that are not included in KS X 1001. Its use is meaningless in a Unicode-based environment.

≈ 1160 HJ
F hangul jungseong filler

(As a side note, the compatibility decomposition mapping to U+1160 HANGUL JUNGSEONG FILLER is not appropriate, as the function/intent of U+3164 is completely different from the function of U+1160. But it is too late for that mapping to be removed.)
